Discussion:

Yesterday Dan Ceynar and I visited potential sites in the Turkey River basin. We selected two sites that should provide good coverage of the basin. The new locations have good (but not perfect) visibility in almost all direction, access to power, access to the Internet, and reasonable security. The security is enhanced by the fact that both radars will be sited at not very attracted places: one next to a CAFO (Concentrated Animal Feeding Operation) or a hog facility, and the second at a municipal waste water treatment plant.

We are working on making final arrangements with the power utilities and the Internet Service Providers.

The new location can be checked at: <http://ifis.iowafloodcenter.org/ifis/more/ifloods/planning/>
